The vast majority of the travelers are from Honduras. The caravan is comprised of between 2,000 and 3,000 people, according to statistics from the U.S. Border Patrol. The organization had a press conference on Friday where it said that the caravan, which departed from the Mexican city of San Pedro Sula on Oct. 14, is continuing to grow. The group said that it's currently made up of between 2,000 and 3,000 people. "We will continue to escort all the people who are part of this caravan on their way to the United States." The caravan is comprised mostly of Central Americans who are fleeing violence and poverty. The majority of the migrants have gone to the southern Mexican state of Chiapas. This is also where the Mexican military and U.S. Border Patrol are stationed. During the press conference, U.S. Border Patrol officials explained that the caravan will be able to pass through the area. They said that they would not attempt to apprehend them while they travel in large groups. They did say that they will meet the caravan at their final destination. "This group is large, like the last group. But we will not escort them through the area. They are free to travel wherever they want, but we want to make sure there is no obstruction to these people's free passage into the United States." U.S. Border Patrol says that it has not seen the caravan in several days. They had their press conference on Friday.
