The band's first new track since 2012, 'The Party's Over', has been criticised by reviewers, who questioned why the band were covering the song by Jimmy Page and Robert Plant. Paul Epworth told The Times: "It's amazing, and disturbing, that someone would make something like this out of one of the greatest rock songs ever written, and that it would be compared to Zeppelin." He added: "I'm sure there are a lot of people who would love that comparison, but to many people it sounds like straight-up stealing." The Killers star Brandon Flowers insisted the feedback - which they've received on social media - is "part and parcel of being a rock star". He told The Times: "It can be funny and OK to hate what's popular, but what's OK is to hate what you think is cool or popular and it's definitely OK to hate what you think is crap. What's not OK is to hate what you don't know because sometimes things you don't know are going to give you something that surprises you or something that you'd never expect, and it really is part and parcel of being a rock star." He added: "We hope people
