The film was banned by the Federal Board of Censorship in India. In Germany, the film was banned until 2003 when it was deemed to be the highest grossing film at the German box office. In 2002, it was listed as the 37th-most popular film in the country. Plot In the autumn of 1975, two Indian students, Raj and Sanjay, come to study at a college in England and make friends with a group of international students. They hang out at the students' flat, but are not very popular with them. They become more comfortable with the English way of life and learn to enjoy some of the pleasures of the country. One evening, a few of them go to see a local film entitled "Satan's Harvest". In the middle of the film, a girl is led away by a cult of cannibalistic Indians, led by a man called

Professor Nidal. The cult take her to a camp, where they prepare her for sacrifice. The group is led by two other men, one of whom (who resembles a Nazi) wants to sacrifice her in the name of his god. However, the girl manages to escape and runs into the woods, where she is found by Raj and Sanjay. The two Indian students take her to the college's canteen, where
