Category:Computer-related introductions in 2013Purification of the cytochrome P-450 catalyzing phenylisopropylacetyl CoA deacylation. The cytochrome P-450 that catalyzes the deacylation of phenylisopropylacetyl CoA has been purified to apparent homogeneity from rat liver microsomes. The microsomal catalyst binds to and is converted by solubilization and reassociation to a single 14.4-kDa band on sodium dodecyl sulfate-polyacrylamide gel electrophoresis. A single band with the same mobility is also detected in a chromatofocusing column when the affinity resin is preloaded with the phenylisopropylacetyl CoA deacylase substrate. The purified enzyme is functional and active toward acetate, propionate, butyrate, and valerate. The addition of NADPH-cytochrome P-450 reductase to the purified catalyst results in an increased specific activity. The enzyme is inhibited by carbon monoxide and by some imidazole fungicides. The specific activity of the enzyme in microsomes from phenobarbital-treated rats is half of that found in microsomes from phenobarb 2d92ce491b
