For example, Patent Document 1 proposes a tool in which a hammer is attached to the end of a pull rod. The hammer is configured to compress a flange of a clamping target attached to a workpiece. The tool includes a hydraulic actuator that drives the pull rod. As shown in FIGS. 6 and 7, the flange of a clamping target 1 is attached to a workpiece 2. The workpiece 2 is driven by a spindle (not shown) to draw the clamping target 1. When the flange is compressed, the clamping target 1 is strongly pressed against the workpiece 2. The flange of the clamping target 1 is generally formed of a thin metal sheet. Therefore, in the case of an apparatus provided with a pneumatic power source, the thin flange may be damaged by an impact force of a piston of the power source. As shown in FIG. 7, the area of the flange in the vicinity of the end is formed in a curved shape. Therefore, the area of the flange near the end is less likely to be damaged by the impact force of the piston. When the flange of the clamping target 1 is compressed, a large shear load is applied to the clamping target 1. Thus, it is important that the clamping target 1 be maintained in position during the compression of the flange. In order to meet this need, a clamping target 1 is formed of a material, such as a steel sheet, which is hard and is easily processed. However, in the case of a clamping target 1 which is made of a material, such as a steel sheet, having high rigidity, the flange is not easily compressed because of the high rigidity of the flange, as shown in FIG. 6. As a result, it is difficult to maintain the accuracy of the flange in position during the compression of the flange. The use of conventional hair care products is well known. For example, hair care products such as shampoos,
