Former President Barack Obama. Cameras and other digital devices are becoming more popular for home surveillance, however, they can be potentially hijacked if there are enough points of failure. Not even the latest intelligent home surveillance systems can guarantee the safety of a home. As IoT technology becomes more advanced, IoT devices will take on many different types of functionalities, such as water, energy, finance and health, for example. IoT devices are easy to install, difficult to remove, and the installation of one device can cause a ripple effect. And, this is a big problem because the Internet of Things has no virtual network switch to protect the network from attacks. IoT devices are created to perform a specific task, but if they are not up to the task, a problem will arise. For example, a security camera, audio recorder and doorbell are all different devices. But, a hacker can easily install an audio recording device without setting a password on the device or turning off the motion detection. The hackers are called bot hackers.
