Presidential Elections (COPE) is now required to choose a woman, a member of a minority, and an ex-senator or ex-governor of a state (or an ex-Minority Leader or Governor of a state), among the three candidates with the highest votes. In addition, the candidates who win the most delegates have to be chosen from both political parties (so that both major political parties will have a candidate), and the delegates must be members of the political parties in at least 50 states.
