The IMF figures also show that a current trend of rising debt levels in emerging economies is likely to continue. Indonesia has, like many other countries, run up large public and private debt to fund big infrastructure projects. The IMF forecasts that it will face a debt overhang – that is, debt levels rising to unsustainable levels – of up to 14 per cent of gross domestic product next year. Other countries with large public debt burdens are also likely to experience financial turmoil. In 2017, the country with the largest level of debt, Turkey, is expected to have debts of nearly $700 billion, or about 120 per cent of GDP. The average debt burden for Group of 20 countries as a whole is forecast to be at nearly 150 per cent of GDP. The IMF expects this financial turmoil will result in a small cut to global growth this year. “The great majority of emerging market and developing countries are projected to maintain a current account deficit,” the IMF said. “However, public debt is projected to be high in most countries. Declining growth prospects, in combination with rising global debt, implies that the current account deficit will shrink in many countries.” The crisis is expected to hit emerging economies particularly hard, with Indonesia, Pakistan and India the countries most likely to feel the pinch. It could even push countries into default on their debt. Argentina’s debt level is projected to hit 60 per cent of GDP next year, according to the IMF, with some economists warning that the country could be pushed into a default that could trigger a crash in global markets. Alarm bells are ringing over another debt-fuelled crisis. Iceland’s government has racked up a record total of $15.2 billion in debt, and a large share of this year
