He's a professional researcher, and he's tangled up with his inside man in a story that involves conspiracy, tragedy and murder. Meanwhile, with a mysterious legacy, a mysterious fortune, and an adventurous two-year old nephew, an older, married Max Richter is becoming more than just a research assistant: he's a dad. Living in suburban Berlin, Max juggles the demands of his day job, his conjugal life, and his cramped schedule of reading, eating, and watching bad TV. There's a small problem: his in-home personal assistant is dying. Without a solution, Max is forced to wade into uncomfortable territory: death, computers, and family. Caught between his wife, his mother, his best friend, the IRS, and most of all, the clock, Max finds himself on a search for answers to increasingly desperate questions. Teaming up with an initially hostile engineering student, he's not sure what he'll find, but he's sure of one thing: this isn't going to be quite as easy as it seems." in HD quality. If I try to do it, I get an error. Consider: local x = { -- Just a node __tostring = function() return tostring(self) end __index = function(t, key) local m = {}; m.value = key return m end } Now, if I do this: a = {} print(string.dump(a)) print(string.dump(x)) a.value = x print(string.dump(a)) I get this output: table: "" table: {} table: table: __tostring: function() return tostring(self) end __index: function(t, key) local m = {}; m.value = key return m end value: table: __tostring: function() return tostring(self) end __index: function(t, key) local m = {}; m.value = key return m end Why is it possible to do this? A: I'm not sure how it works but the following code local x = {} x.__index = function(t, key) return { value = key } end print(string.dump(x)) works fine.
