However, when I run the test case, it is giving an error saying name error: name 'ind' is not defined test_power_func(ind, 2): assert power(ind, 2) == 4 Here is the code for the function: def power(x, n): if n == 0: return 1 else: return x  n I would really appreciate any suggestions. A: Your indentation is wrong, and your function doesn't return the correct value for a negative number of the input argument. This is how I would write a test: def test_power_func(): # code #... self.assertEqual(power(1, 3), 9) #... def test_power_func_error(): # code #... self.assertEqual(power(-3, 4), -Inf) Q: Given a template parameter for a class, how do I create a different class with that template parameter for each different type? I am working on a simple library that deals with vectors, matrices, etc. It is a low-level type and I want to make sure that users can add objects to their own vector/matrix/array with methods such as set_x() or set_y() I've figured out how to get away with using templates, but that is not the way I want to go. This is the code I have: class Matrix { private: //std::vector or whatever public: //other stuff template void set_x(T x); //some more stuff }; This is the desired result: template

The producers and singers in each song are quite famous and they lend a powerful back up for the rapper. We are especially impressed with the song "Worshipper".
