A: Several things, that come to mind: Look at /var/log/messages (or something like that), and look at your system logs Does your system crash or lock up sometimes, and then start working again? If so, look at /var/log/syslog and /var/log/kern.log Make sure your system is not overheating. Run top in a terminal, and make sure all processes are at a reasonable level of activity. Have you upgraded to a recent (or older) kernel? You may need the newer kernel modules. I hope that's enough to get you going in the right direction, and I'd recommend changing your question to include more of the information, like what's happening in the logs. [Treatment of overactive bladder: how, when, why, what, and how long?]. Overactive bladder (OAB) has an enormous and increasing impact on patients' quality of life and on healthcare resources. Recent advances in non-pharmacological treatment options have brought an easier, more cost-effective and patient-friendly therapeutic approach for OAB. Pharmacological management of OAB has also made progress with the release of many new drugs. We review the literature to analyze the main therapeutic options for OAB and how to choose the best therapeutic options for each patient. We also discuss the real issues about treatment with antimuscarinics and
