Sunday, February 19, 2013 It's been a wild couple of weeks, but I'm now less than two weeks away from a show of some of my work. The exhibition, entitled "Alliance of Elements," opens March 8th at the marvelous Community Arts Center in Kansas City, MO. I'm thrilled to be included, as are most of the artists whose work I've featured this blog and will continue to do so in the future. The show will feature textiles, jewelry, sculpture, printmaking, paintings, drawings, photography, and a video installation. There's something for everyone. More information on the opening, the event, and the artists is available on the Community Arts Center's website, where there's also an artist's statement you can read. My jewelry, which you'll be able to see in all its lovely detail, is a silk and brass necklace. Functional genomics: a new approach to gene identification. Functional genomics is an approach to gene identification that relies on the analysis of the phenotype of cells and tissues as a result of the expression of particular genes. Functional genomics is based on the assumption that, for example, the loss of function of a protein encoded by a given gene will result 2d92ce491b
