The headline and writing in the headline of a story published in the Lawrence Journal-World, a daily newspaper, has been removed at the request of the newspaper. "When are we going to start killing white people?" a story in the paper said. "These couldn't be black or Hispanic, they're white. When are we going to start killing white people? June 12." The story was about student racism. School officials said that after complaints from parents and the general public about the page, school officials decided to suspend publication of the paper, which was the student newspaper of Johnson County Community College. "We absolutely didn't know that it was published in other states or across the country until today," said Steve Schultz, the Johnson County Community College president. Schultz said the students were responsible for creating the page, and the school would not be sharing any lessons about racism or free speech with the students. The front page was shared online in October, prompting complaints from people saying it was racist and promoting violence. (bit.ly/2A3qPuQ) The College Republicans, the student Republicans group, said the article was satirical. "It was meant to be a joke. He's obviously not serious," said Jay Creswell, the group's president. The University of Kansas Police Department said in a tweet on Tuesday that the school is aware of the article and is working with local authorities. The article did not appear on
