Super Excellent Academic & Intelligence Book Pdf Free Download Each air force has its own unique character traits, ethics, ideals and expectations. That, however, goes for certain things. What cannot be separated from any one of these are their leaders. A fine example of this is the way the British Royal Air Force (RAF) handles its leaders. In basic uniform, it is a well-dressed, professional, and disciplined organization that is epitomized by its chief officers. In terms of mutual trust and cooperation, the commanders-in-chief of the RAF work hand in hand to ensure that the proper focus and confidence of the highly educated, professional, and disciplined pilots are not jeopardized by a misused or misplaced promise. This trait is highly evident in the leadership of the RAF over the years. THE SUPERIOR COMPETENCIES OF THE RAF BA: We are broadly categorized into four stream of the pilot training. There are various tests to check the competence and the ability of the applicants as they enter the training. These tests include: Medical Exam, Logbook, Psychometric Test, Interview, and Physical Fitness Test. Similarly, not just the pilots but their chief officers are also given their own tests, namely: Leadership Test, Operational Test, Performance Proficiency Test, and Pilot Aviation Commander Test. These tests are designed to gauge and check the performance and the prospects of an officer. The following tests are too important, and they play a key role in the selection of the officers. The various tests are subjective, so what is right for one person may not be right for someone else. For an officer to pass the tests, he should be an excellent communicator. He must be able to interact with people at all levels as a leader. Further, an officer must ensure that everyone else's expectations, needs, and aspirations are met, and he should also convey this respect to the men and women he leads. This implies that he must be realistic. However, an officer should never shy away from knowing that a certain procedure, policy, or ruling will be rejected by the men and women he leads. It's not that he is not listening to all suggestions and opinions; it
