(Mr. Hernandez / European Pressphoto Agency) For more than two years, a Colombian asylum seeker has had to find employment before he can be relocated, leaving him on the brink of permanent exile from his homeland. Now, he has lost his chance. Jairo Mari, a 32-year-old print maker who has a master's degree in graphic design from the University of Valparaiso in Colombia, has been ordered to leave Ecuador in four weeks, a decision that he and his attorney, Guillermo Moncada, said was taken without the benefit of a legal hearing. A decision of this kind in a country that claims to protect human rights would usually be immediately appealed. Mr. Mari said that his lawyers had told him that he could still appeal at the highest level — to the Inter-American Court of Human Rights, in the capital of San José, Costa Rica — but they say they have been stonewalled. "It's not rational," Mr. Mari said of the Ecuadorian judiciary. "It's a very serious violation of the principles of due process." Mr. Mari has lived in Ecuador since 2010, having fled the country with his wife and two children. He said he had sought protection from civil war in the oil-rich municipality of Sucumbios in northern Ecuador, which is largely inhabited by Afro-Ecuadorians. But he was ordered to leave town after the outbreak of clashes between police and indigenous coca growers that began in 2012. He moved to Ecuador's capital, Quito, and tried to find work. The police raided his house in October 2012, saying they had found a cache of guns hidden in ba244e880a
