Former officer Matthew Pack was arrested on suspicion of online solicitation of a minor. Pack, who resigned from the department in 2017, is accused of looking at child pornography from "The 100 Day Project" on his personal phone while he was at the Brazoria County Jail in 2016. The site, run by an online marketer, offers parents an opportunity to photograph their children on a 100-day journey. Pack has been jailed for two years after pleading guilty in a drug case. A spokeswoman for the university police department, Jacqueline Kienlen, said the department and Pack were unable to discuss the case because it is pending in court. "Texas State University public safety has policies and procedures to keep our students and community safe, and we do not condone inappropriate behavior by any employee," the university's president, Dr Robert B Khoury, said in a statement. "Any violation of those policies will be fully investigated and pursued." "Child pornography is inherently a very serious crime, and we have been reviewing this matter," the statement added. The arrest was first reported by the Houston Chronicle. The case was first brought to the attention of Texas State in August 2017 when a former colleague reported a complaint from a woman who alleged Pack made her sexually inappropriate comments while on the job. "Pack sent her inappropriate text messages and emails and made comments such as 'we would have a lot of fun' and 'let's go in my truck'," the woman wrote in a written statement. "She ended up having to go to the emergency room." In June 2018, Pack was indicted on charges of marijuana possession and unlawful display of an official emblem and was fired in September after he pleaded guilty to the drug charge. A criminal background check is also required for all new hires.
