Autodesk Provides $30 Million in Support to Environmentally Responsible Manufacturing Autodesk, Inc. today announced a new level of support for its Autodesk® software products for Lean Manufacturing, which ensures the most energy-efficient and environmentally friendly manufacturing practices. The program expands on Autodesk's commitment to making all of its products fully compatible with the Digital Manufacturing and Design (DMD) initiative, and includes software, services and training to provide sustainability and environmental benefits to companies that adopt DMD. This $30 million financial investment supports Autodesk's broader mission to make all of its products and services work with DMD. Through the initiative, Autodesk has already provided software for the tools and processes that drive DMD, developed a new certification program for DMD and made Autodesk software available in the DMD open source repository. Through this new $30 million support package, Autodesk is expanding its commitment to support the development and adoption of DMD's Lean Manufacturing concept. Autodesk will also make its software available through the DMD open source repository for anyone to use, free of charge, for use in any automation, manufacturing or engineering application. Autodesk has a long history of providing software that can help manufacturers, engineers, architects, designers and others reduce their environmental footprint.

Read through our work or find out how we can help you. Population and Human Rights: A Response to SDG #13 A NEGLECTED COMMONALITY The Human Rights & Development Desk is an independent web portal. It is not an advocacy tool, a direct action network, or the media arm of any denomination or religious body. It is a platform offering evidence-based tools and knowledge, as well as inspiring ideas, practical tips and solutions. It is our hope that this work contributes to building a better world. The Human Rights & Development Desk is a project of KONVIVA, a private non-profit that researches and shares timely knowledge on issues of human rights and development, and works to build a better world through capacity development and collaboration. Everyday survival is a right enjoyed by every human being on Earth; basic provisions should be available to all regardless of race, gender, religion or origin. Yet, millions of people in the developing world are denied access to basic and fundamental rights. Human Rights bodies continue to “list” violations of those rights. “Population and Human Rights” explores the root of this injustice, exploring the conditions that facilitate the violation of basic human rights. After a brief historical and conceptual review, the problem is examined according to the Pillars of Human Rights, including the 1st Pillar: respect for human dignity, the 2nd: non-discrimination, the 3rd: freedom of opinion and expression, and the 4th: adequate standards of living. Health, education, employment and the right to adequate living conditions, while universal, are particularly relevant to the issues of reproductive rights, women’s rights, and population dynamics in general. This includes the responsibilities of governments and socio-economic and demographic factors, such as population pressures, urbanization, and environmental degradation. How can population pressures affect human rights? This section offers practical ways for a global population agenda of mainstream human rights best practice, using real world examples to illustrate the point. Furthermore, an International Day is observed annually on May 12 to highlight the importance of human rights, with regional and national events also held. This year, the theme is “The Human Person: Our Common Pathway to Justice, Truth, and Dignity”. 3da54e8ca3
