How the Red Lantern Missile is different from the main cannon. Red Lantern Missiles are direct fire weapons used by the Chromedome. They are, according to the wiki, "a weapon appearing primarily in the Gold Light and Silver Light expansions, and are launched from the base of the Spear of Light. They both fire on a cone shape, mirroring that of the main cannon." As the name indicates, the missiles are covered in red paint, unlike the canon cannon which is covered in silver, so they are easier to see than the cannon. Unused Red Lantern Missile Artwork by Zulu Background Story In the Rodian version, the Red Lantern Missiles were used as a guard against massive Korrasami and Harvesting operations. The red paint covering the missiles makes them easier to see than the cannon. When Red Lantern Missiles are fired, they will not cause any damage to the base's enemy units. They will, however, take damage from their enemies. The Red Lantern Missile is not meant to be a ranged defensive unit that is only used in defense. Instead, the Red Lantern Missile is meant to be used offensively against enemy units while the base is being attacked by a Harvesting attack. The Gold version of the Red Lantern Missile is more focused on offense. It has red paint-splotches that replace the main cannon, and make the missiles easier to see. However, in both versions, the Red Lantern Missile will launch alongside the cannon. The Space Speeder named Red Lantern Rocket, however, does not have a Red Lantern Missile. This version can only be used in Defense mode. The Gold Light version of the Red Lantern Missile is more interesting. Its missile is still red, but its paint is only splotches that make it easier to see. Additionally, it fires twin missiles instead of
