You keep hardcopies of signed work orders, completed insurance papers, handwritten notes, checks and so on. Sometimes you even file them. But finding them again later means digging through drawers, folders and piles on your desk. The search is tedious and often unsuccessful. And if you do find the documents, sharing them involves copying, faxing or "snail mailing" them. A desktop scanner can help solve your paper problem, but a real solution requires more than a piece of hardware. And most "out of the box" personal scanning software isn't up to the task.
