Based on pH gradient and FRET (fluorescence resonance energy transfer) technology, a method for H(+)-ATPase activity assay was established. The primary microspheres, containing redox-fluorescent calcium indicator (Calcium Green 5N) and molecularly imprinted polymer, were successfully prepared. After enzymatic hydrolysis of ATP, a pH gradient was established and H(+)-ATPase activity could be calculated by the fluorescent intensity of Calcium Green 5N in the microsphere. This assay method was compared with the traditional colorimetry method, and showed a good correlation (R(2)=0.997). This method could be used to detect H(+)-ATPase activity and determine the inhibitory effect of drugs on H(+)-ATPase. This method provides a new approach to H(+)-ATPase activity assay.Q: Pandas: How to add separate sets of columns for each value of a unique column
