The only issue I am having is when the data is extracted from the database to the file it is not recognized as a table and it is a lot of user fields. Is there a solution to solve this? It is supposed to be a simple import. A: I don't know if this is a solution

Category:Electronic design automationQ: Sencha: Add new fields to Ext.dataview.List I know this question has been asked before and I have been through all the questions and answers I could find related to this. I'm new to sencha, and I'm wondering why adding new fields to an Ext.dataview.List doesn't seem to work with it. I'm probably missing something basic. Basically, i have a list displayed as a grid with a dropdown list on the first column of the grid. I would like to add a date column to my list so I can add events to it when the user selects the date from the list, for which I'm trying to use the addColumn method. When I add the column using the code in the example below, the date column is displayed, but it is not in the grid(which displays the names of the column), instead it is under the list. My code: Ext.define('test', { extend: 'Ext.dataview.List', alias: 'widget.test', store: 'testStore', layout: 'fit', itemTpl: '{this.data.eventName}{this.data.eventName}' }); Ext.define('teststore', { extend: 'Ext.data.Store', model: 'testmodel', storeId: 'teststore', remoteSort: true, autoLoad: true, sorters: [{ property: 'date', direction: 'ASC' }] }); Ext.create('Ext.window.Window',{ title: 'testWindow', width: 1000, height: 600, layout: 'fit', items: [{ xtype: 'dataview', 1cb139a0ed
