T cell stimulation and immunogenicity of antigens in inactivated porcine parvovirus as administered by subcutaneous injection. Two different doses of a nonreplicating, inactivated porcine parvovirus vaccine (genus Parvovirus family) were administered subcutaneously to female miniature swine by a pilot study to evaluate immune responses. One group of miniature swine received 4 X 10(9) plaque forming units (PFU) of vaccine; the other group received 1 X 10(10) PFU of vaccine. Both vaccines induced detectable levels of specific antibodies as well as a rapid in vitro response to a specific stimulus. The antigen-specific in vitro cellular response was dose dependent in the high dosage group. Proliferation of lymphocytes in response to parvovirus antigen was not uniformly obtained and was variable among individual animals. The cytotoxic activity of lymphocytes in response to parvovirus in all dose groups was not detectable. The in vivo immune response to parvovirus was evaluated by examining the popliteal lymph node (P.L.N.) lymphocyte in vitro response to parvovirus. The in vitro cellular response to parvovirus was dose-dependent in animals of both vaccine dose groups. These results indicate that an inactivated porcine parvovirus vaccine could be administered subcutaneously to female miniature swine and that these animals are not tolerant to this virus.Q: draw lines on a custom canvas element In my homepage I want to have an open window for people to draw on with a custom canvas element.
