The central dominant galaxies are Fornax-A, -B and -C. by A Tsuchiya 2019 Cited by 7 Objects in the centres of the X-ray-emitting component of the Virgo cluster. A. Tsuchiya^{1,2}, K. Araki², R. A low-surface-brightness plasma-like component in the X-ray spectra of the core of the cluster is revealed. The component is relatively metal-rich and cool, and it may trace the hot plasma produced by a galactic wind driven by the central supermassive black hole at the centre of the cluster. by A Schindler 2019 Cited by 12 Section 3.4 details the use of the Color-Magnitude Diagrams (CMDs) to quantify the individual structure of the Virgo cluster, and to compare the properties of Virgo to those of other nearby galaxy clusters. This analysis has revealed that Virgo has a hot component of galaxies, which is likely the remnant of a cooling flow seen in the past, as well as cool substructures which appear to have been accreted during the past 13 Gyr. by G Pisano 2019 Cited by 7 In this paper we study the star formation (SF) properties of galaxies in the five largest nearby galaxy clusters, namely Fornax, Coma, Abell 1367, A1991 and A3562, based on the Spitzer Faint Infrared Extragalactic Survey (Spitzer FLEX) observations. For each cluster we provide the integrated mid-IR luminosity distributions, the specific SF rates, the percentage of late-type SF galaxies

The objective of this study was to conduct a meta-analysis to evaluate the short-term response of milk production to pasture exposure and weaning transition. The data from 24 trials were tested using a mixed model and were adjusted by herd-year-season-location, as well as for the square of the fixed effects (e.g. lactation stage, percentage of concentrate and animal class). Herd-year-season was used as random effect and lactation stage as a repeated measure. The response of milk production was evaluated as a percentage change compared with weaned cows in the previous lactation. The model was based on 4,603 lactation curves from 1,583 dairy cows. The herd-mean percentage change in milk production per month was 0.33% (95% confidence interval: 0.21, 0.46) for the first month of pasture exposure and increased to 0.37% (0.23, 0.51) for the last month. The average increment in daily milk production was 10.4 kg/day (9.9, 10.8) during the first month. The corresponding values were 11.6 kg/day (11.2, 11.9) and 12.1 kg/day (11.7, 12.5) for the last month. Similarly, average daily gain during the first month was 1.0 kg/day (0.9, 1.0) and 1.3 kg/day (1.2, 1.3) for the last month. The increase in milk production was due mainly to an increase in milk volume; however, milk fat also increased (P 570a42141b
