A scathing letter from the U.S. Treasury Department is warning Puerto Rico of "severe financial consequences" if it does not break its "disturbing fiscal path" by rejecting a $422 million federal loan to help offset the island's $72 billion debt load.

Continue Reading Below "We have a clear roadmap for dealing with the island's existing debt and for looking ahead to the critical task of debt restructuring and consolidation by restructuring its debt," a spokeswoman for the Treasury Department said Monday. Puerto Rico's previous leadership agreed in May to take on the debt, leaving the island in a massive short-term cash crisis. The US territory is currently struggling to make payments on an $8.2 billion loan and a $2.2 billion interest payment due next week. Last week, Puerto Rico's justice secretary and a government employee had to file for bankruptcy protection after reporting "insufficient financial means." Last week, Puerto Rico's justice secretary and a government employee had to file for bankruptcy protection after reporting "insufficient financial means." "They owe $8.2 billion of their debt. That debt is either going to have to be restructured or they're going to default on that debt," the spokeswoman said. "No option should be left off the table," she said.
