According to a report by Senator John McCain and William D. Cohan of the Washington Post, the former US ambassador to China, Arnold Linkhart, told former US Defense Secretary Dick Cheney in 1984 that the United States was not only aware of the Chinese regime's plans but that American special forces might be used to suppress the pro-democracy movement in China. "Linkhart admitted that U.S. military leaders had been involved in pre-April 4 planning at Chinese defense ministry and Politburo headquarters, and U.S. policymakers were briefed by the State Department on those meetings prior to April 4," the Washington Post report states. "Linkhart said the Chinese set the day of the massacre as the best time to deal with the unrest because it did not present an external threat." However, the ambassador also claimed that the US did not intend to intervene or send in troops to prevent the massacre from taking place. According to Linkhart, the US was also aware that the Chinese Army might attack peaceful demonstrators, but did not intend to be involved in
