The Leighton Foundation has recently acquired the material and property of a former independent Scottish newspaper, the Marcliffe Herald. This new magazine, which will be produced by The Leighton Foundation, is being designed to bring a wide range of material about Scotland's past into the public domain. The Herald was established in Edinburgh in 1829, being the first newspaper in Scotland to be issued weekly rather than once or twice a month. It ran for more than 150 years, and published an extraordinary range of material including some of the world's first golf courses, photographs of the Leopold I of Belgium at Balmoral, shots of Alfred Lord Tennyson, and a front page on the death of Queen Victoria. In 1913 it became an organ of the Scottish Unionist Party and a major supporter of the National Party of Scotland during the First World War, to which it provided an equally unexpected cover, The Scottish Journal of Arts and Science, in which it frequently published long and detailed articles. The Marcliffe Herald ceased publication in 1990 and was wound up in 1991. It was originally printed on the lithographic stones of the late nineteenth century, and was one of the first newspapers in Scotland to use modern offset lithographic methods. The Herald was edited by John Smith, whose marvellous
