RECOMMENDED: A nifty freeware utility by Cyril Mangi from UK, Backup Spy allows you to record everything that the mouse pointer does on the screen, including clicks, double clicks and menu selections. The tool records and stores everything, even the Windows OS. It works in the background and allows you to store all the mouse clicks and menu selections made by the active user to a separate file. The data can then be later played back. You can use this option to create software demos, or run through complex mouse clicks when testing a new application. The one-of-a-kind software has a few shortcomings: the option of stopping the recording process is missing and the tool lacks an automatic mode. It would have been nice to record more complex mouse clicks, for example those performed in browsers, and even the OS settings. Nevertheless, Backup Spy remains an interesting alternative to the more popular Mouse Spies.
