In response to a question on how she would change America, the Democratic Socialist told Kelly, "I would love to be in this country where [white nationalists] felt the full force of the law when they engage in violence and threats of violence against people who are simply exercising their 1st amendment rights. That is not where we live in the United States of America today." The host wasn't buying it. "Is that not the same thing as saying, "That's ok, go out and f*ck people up?" she asked. "No, I think it's pretty different," Ocasio-Cortez responded, before claiming that the question was "unfair" because she was talking about violence — and violence toward police — when she used the word "people." "The fact that it's people in general and police in particular is very different than threatening a person and targeting them," she added. Kelly's a1d647c40b
