Bowling We are having some pretty interesting weather today, it seems to be going from one extreme to the next, so I figured I would chime in with my thoughts on what a newbie should do. I am looking at getting myself a good set of aluminium bolts, some have a head, some have a spindle and some have an open pin. I am looking to replace the pins I have and so far I have had to drop off 5 pins at different clubs as they fail. There seems to be a bit of debate on the potential of different materials on the pins. Some say they have a finite life and the pins break sooner than others and that would mean the likely hood of having pins to fail on a great day. So the choice of material I have already made is based on my experience and the advice I have received. The most common advice I have received is to find a relatively cheap pin that has the right diameter and then buy a cheap 'cup' type arrangement to fit it (not sure of this part). I have also read that wearing shoes that give good support is very useful and if I have a weak back or ankle they don't help. My feet do some weird things - I go backwards when I punt (never actually thought I was that fast, but it is by speed that you hit the ball) and I go in when I run (narrow board, so not the best of conditions for this). So I guess at the moment the choice of pins is: Bare toes at the club Socks at the club (I wear old footy shorts) Boots at the club (trying to think of a plan here, the importance of a good pair of bowling shoes) I have a couple of pairs of padded socks and love them, though I haven't won on them, I am getting more confident on them. If you are choosing pins, go for the smallest ones that fit your feet (usually we do this for clubs) and do some pair testing for comfort and safety as

Just months into his presidency, the future of relations between the United States and Cuba could be up for grabs as the Trump administration is threatening to re-open the door for Cuba to become a "full member" of the United Nations. Indeed, that is the focus of a panel discussion titled, "Cuba: Diplomacy and the U.S. Supreme Court" on Wednesday at 4 p.m. at the International House of Prayer in Orange. Panelist Maria Teresa Rodriguez was the lead author of a prominent section of the island's constitution that allows the government to join the United Nations. "The most important thing for us in terms of looking to the future is to continue to deepen Cuba's relations with other countries in Latin America, and the United States is the natural partner," Rodriguez said. "We also want to try to deepen relations with other countries in the world and the government has just signed a historic agreement with the European Union." The "Corporate Council" of the International House of Prayer was formed in 1999 by Trinity House to strengthen the body of believers and encourage families to adopt a united and unified stance on prayer. Organizers, which include David A. Lane of Irvine, are trying to draw a big crowd to hear experts — both Cuban and otherwise — discuss all aspects of relations between the U.S. and Cuba. "This is an important issue," said Joseph L. Cook, president of the group. "We are calling this meeting as our first major public event to warn of the threat to the family of God." Rodriguez, who now lives in Atlanta, said her involvement in the creation of Cuba's constitution was a part of the early days of establishing democracy in the island nation. "What was really important to me was that the constitution establish the basis on which a democracy can be built," she said. Though Rodriguez remained a strong supporter of President Fidel Castro's brand of communism, which helped bring her to the United States from her native Cuba in the late 1970s, she said the early days of the revolution were very dark. "The first four or five years in that decade were really very hard and it was hard to see a place where things would
