a superconducting gap in an isotropic 3-D system with electron-hole pairing. We consider the formation of a superconducting gap in an isotropic 3-D system with electron-hole pairing. The gap is predicted to be induced by a phase separation of the superconducting and nonsuperconducting regions. It is realized by the combined effect of short-range spin and charge fluctuations, which are suppressed by the electron-hole pairing in this 3-D system. A similar mechanism will be important in phase separation-induced superconductivity in layered d-wave superconductors.Data mining will play a more central role in future retail sales-based forecasts. The end of the year is always a busy time when retailers and manufacturers rely on reports and surveys to piece together their financials, but 2017 was especially so as we hit the end of our DFS Survey Conference.
Thanks to those who took the time to participate in these gatherings, and to those who sent us their data – and often without telling us where you got the data. Late in the year, we’re leaving behind our typical survey-only methodology. We didn’t get many new data points in our time on the road, and they were largely subdued, especially in the U.S. But we did see some encouraging changes within the data, and by extension, the forecasts we’re working with. The first wave of a data revolution Determining the exact size of the data revolution that’s taking place with the decline of hard-copy, hard-copy-inspired national data, is difficult, but it’s clear that it is happening. We still need to

A rare case of seizure activity in a patient with chronic alcohol abuse with only mild cognitive impairment and no mental retardation. We describe a 38-year-old man, a native of China, who was admitted to the emergency department with an alcohol-induced seizure. The patient had a history of chronic alcohol abuse for more than 20 years. The patient had no mental retardation or cognitive impairment at clinical examination. Electroencephalography showed frequent, rhythmic, generalized spike-wave activity. The magnetic resonance imaging of the patient's brain showed no specific abnormality. We propose that this case reflects a condition with a long history of chronic alcoholism and epileptogenic activity. f30f4ceada
