Circumferential and double transverse rectus abdominis myocutaneous flap in reconstruction of the urogenital system. An extensive urogenital defect due to the treatment of gynecologic malignancies is rare. The choice of operative reconstructive procedure must consider a number of factors including tumor type, anatomic location, and anticipated continence. A two-team approach of the abdominal wall and perineum is used for reconstruction of the urogenital system, with an extended flap-placement, inset, and closure on the abdominal wall. A circumferential skin paddle is designed to close the defect after the donor site is closed and to cover the perineum and the edges of the abdominal wall. The flap is then rotated onto the perineum to fill the urogenital defect. When feasible, use of the abdominal wall, as in this case, helps minimize pain from the donor site. The use of the abdominal wall increases the arc of rotation of the flap, while simultaneously decreasing the size of the skin paddle, minimizing tension on the donor site. Furthermore, the two transverse rectus abdominis musculocutaneous flaps used on each side, together with the coverage of the urogenital defect, increase the arc of rotation and reduce the size of the skin paddle by 50 percent. Time for a new app? Try Timesheet Pretend you're a team leader. You've been asked to prepare a timesheet for the team. You've just been sent a list of tasks they're supposed to complete, each with a start date, a deadline, and a list of who's responsible. But you're not alone. You need an app that helps you manage your project workflow and prepare your timesheet. Timesheet has been created to address this problem and many others. What makes Timesheet special is that it's easy to use but powerful enough to do real work. Timesheet is built on the same tech stack as AppNexus, so we've known how to make a great timesheet for a while. Our partnership with Microsoft has helped us fine tune the interface and back end to make sure
