(AP Photo/Chuck Burton) NEW HAVEN, Conn. — A federal appeals court on Monday overturned the murder conviction of a former Yale University football player who had claimed in court that his own lawyer had advised him to remain silent and that he had been coerced into signing a confession. The 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals panel unanimously ruled that the conviction of Bruce Ivins, a former microbiologist who was the prime suspect in the 2001 anthrax attacks, violated his Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination. Ivins, 66, was convicted in 2006 in federal court in New Haven of carrying out the attacks and sentenced to a life prison term. He appealed, claiming that his statements to investigators had been coerced, and that his defense lawyer had pressured him to sign the confession. The appeals court reversed the conviction on the basis of a legal error. The panel noted that Ivins's lawyer told him that he had a right to remain silent. "While he should have told Ivins
