This is a revised application of a grant entitled: "Dopamine function in brain development: contribution of D2 receptors to the development of the mesostriatal dopaminergic system". The first aim of the present study is to determine the specific role of D2 receptors in the mesostriatal dopaminergic system during brain development in the rat. In this proposal we will use the D2 agonist quinpirole to determine the effects of chronic administration of this agent during developmental periods on the development of the dopamine receptors and dopamine transporters in the brain. The second aim of this proposal is to determine if the development of the dopaminergic system can be modulated by chronic administration of certain dopamine receptor antagonists. We will also determine if the D2 receptor antagonist domperidone can protect against the malformation of the striatopallidal pathway induced by perinatal dopamine receptor blockade. The third aim of this proposal is to determine if the putative trophic role of dopamine, in vitro, can be demonstrated in the developing striatal neurons of the rat. These experiments will be carried out in dissociated primary cultures of striatal cells from fetal or postnatal rats. In addition, this study will test the hypothesis that the development of nigrostriatal function may depend on a specific functional interaction between dopamine and vasoactive intestinal peptide. Our proposed studies are designed to provide new information about the functional significance of dopamine receptors during ontogeny. In addition, these studies will determine whether the impairment of striatal function induced by perinatal dopamine receptor blockade is prevented by chronic domperidone treatment in postnatal life. The results of these studies should facilitate the future design of therapeutic approaches directed at preventing or reversing dysfunctions associated with neuronal damage induced by dopamine D2 receptor antagonists during the brain development. The team from Madison is poised to win the 2019 Big Ten Tournament and go to the NCAA Tournament. But from the moment Nick Ward and Mike Gesell started playing around with the idea, things started to slide. RELATED: Big Ten shares vision and progress for college basketball Ward and Gesell are the founders of the basketball club D.C. United, the same group that had the foresight to create a Major League Soccer academy in Rockville. That's where they first discovered Maryland native Roddy Peters, who's now a freshman basketball player at Maryland. As the head coach of the Badgers, Bo Ryan put Peters on the roster. "At D.C. United, we had heard these kids from Maryland and realized they were talented," says Ward, a former basketball player at James Madison, Pitt and Drexel. "And of course, they had been coming to play around our program, and we're like, 'We can't lose here.' And you have to believe that there's some sort of fairness. The kids have the ability, the drive, and the athletic ability. It's just whether they were getting a chance and were developed at a level where they were really ready to play in this league." Wisconsin had a nice story in 2018-19. The Badgers won their first Big Ten Tournament championship since the inception of the Big Ten Tournament in 1979, and they are returning to the NCAA Tournament for the fourth time in six seasons, led by Peters, who is the conference's third-leading scorer at 18.4 points per game. RELATED: Minnesota finishes conference regular season with six straight victories But when the Badgers faced Villanova in the Sweet 16 last weekend, they blew a double-digit lead, leading to the Wildcats' 71-58 upset win. It was a startling collapse, one that Ward is not used to seeing from his team. "I'm a guy that believes in different things

Field of the Invention The present invention is directed to a track pump for use with a hydrojet propulsion system, and more particularly, to a structure for mounting the pump to the vehicle and for preventing damage to the pump due to sideways movement of the vehicle. 2. Background of the Related Art Hydrojets are a useful technology for propelling watercrafts. Hydrojets are employed on systems which propel watercraft at high speed over relatively short distances. Typically, these hydrojet systems do not propel a craft at top speeds of 10 knots or more, but rather propel the craft at speeds of about 3 to 8 knots. Due to their compactness and moderate output, hydrojet systems are also useful in powering watercraft at race speeds and engaging in upstream or downstream propulsion of the watercraft. Many different configurations for watercraft propulsion systems employing hydrojets are known. Such systems can be used, for example, for underwater sled launches or for power skis. Many watercrafts, such as personal watercrafts or jet skis, are propelled with relatively high power and high speeds. A propulsion system for such watercrafts preferably includes a hydrojet propulsion system. High power, high speed hydrojet propulsion systems do, however, have certain limitations. The principal drawback of hydrojet systems is the lack of maneuverability of watercrafts propelled by such systems. Such watercraft are therefore limited to use in water conditions that are relatively still, such as rivers and lakes, and to relatively flat areas. In shallow water, such watercraft are generally difficult to propel. In deep water, where the water bottom can become uneven, such watercraft are difficult to keep stable. In view of this, it has been proposed to employ hydrojet propulsion systems in personal watercraft, which are more maneuverable and may be used in deeper water. Such watercraft, for example, as disclosed in U.S. Pat. No. 6,123,073 to Immatteo, include a watercraft and a propulsion device comprising a hull, a pump and an inlet port for admitting water into the pump. The pump is mounted on the hull to the inlet port. The pump compresses the water, which is forced through a conduit to a jet nozzle. A hollow propulsion shaft
