Learn more about QZoom and its capabilities at the official website: of peptidoglycan and lipoteichoic acids from the genus Spirochaeta. The majority of Spirochaeta species studied to date are gram-negative bacilli of low G+C content. Spirochaeta bavariformis ATCC 49616 and Spirochaeta sp. sp. ATCC 35575 were found to have high G+C contents and were investigated for their cellular wall composition. Spirochaeta has three lipopolysaccharides (LPSs) that are similar to the LPSs of Mycobacterium spp. and Mycoplasma arthritidis. The major LPS from S. bavariformis ATCC 49616 was shown to be made up of a four-sugar core to which is attached the glucosamine disaccharide alpha-N-acetylglucosamine-(1-->4)-alpha-D-glucosamine, whereas the major LPS from Spirochaeta sp. sp. ATCC 35575 was composed of a four-sugar core to which is attached the two disaccharides alpha-N-acetylglucosamine-(1-->6)-beta-N-acetylglucosamine and alpha-N-acetylglucosamine-(1-->4)-alpha-D-glucosamine. The sulfate disaccharide sulfated beta-glucosamine was not detected in either LPS. There were no detectable differences in the sugars in the polysaccharide chains as compared to the other Mycobacterium spp., although there are some variations in the glycosylation patterns between these LPSs and those from other Spirochaeta species. The three LPSs exhibited similar mucopolysaccharide content and were immunochemically indistinguishable. Spirochaeta bavariformis ATCC 49616 contains peptidoglycan (PG), LPS, and lipoteichoic acid (LTA), with a peptidylglycan molar mass of 4.1 kDa with two LTA molecules attached. Spirochaeta sp. sp. ATCC 35575 contains PG, LPS, and LTA. The LTA from this organism has an molar mass of 1.1 kDa, and there are 09e8f5149f

There is 1 major problem I have had with this software though. It wont zoom in. When it comes on it seems to be magnifying but it doesnt ever actually get bigger. I am not sure whats going on but I have tried it on 3 different laptops, no luck.
