Given the two classes below, is there any difference, in terms of which should be used for certain scenarios? //Is there any difference between these classes? Which should be used for this scenario? public class InterfaceClass { public void func() { Console.WriteLine("INABCDEF"); } } public abstract class ClassAbstract : InterfaceClass { public abstract void func(); } Thanks! A: One way to find out is to create an instance of each and then run them against an instance of each using reflection. I've written an app that goes as follows: Creates an instance of each Creates an instance of an Interface Class Uses reflection to invoke the methods Uses Reflection to invoke the methods again I would assert that there's a difference when you look at the IL produced. For the Interface method: [MethodImpl(MethodImplOptions.Synchronized)] public void Method() { Console.WriteLine("I am called"); } And for the Class Abstract: [MethodImpl(MethodImplOptions.Synchronized)] public abstract void Method(); A: Yes, there is a difference. Why not check out the decompiled code using ILSpy? The Abstract Class: .method public hidebysig abstract virtual instance void Method () cil managed { .maxstack 8 .locals init ([0] class InterfaceClass I, [1] valuetype [mscorlib]System.Reflection.Method
