A: The problem is that you use the flag -ignorecomponents in your cmake command, which is only appropriate for Windows and not for Linux. Run: cmake -G "Unix Makefiles" -DCMAKE_BUILD_TYPE=RELEASE -DUSE_SPLIT:BOOL=ON \ -DCMAKE_INSTALL_PREFIX:PATH=/opt/isobusterpro in Terminal. It will create an isobusterpro-4.5.1-unix-64bit.tar.gz and place it in the same directory (i.e. you can open it in file manager). In the next step, move the isobusterpro-4.5.1-unix-64bit.tar.gz file to the lib folder of your IsobusterPro. Run: cmake.. -DCMAKE_BUILD_TYPE=RELEASE -DUSE_SPLIT:BOOL=ON -DCMAKE_INSTALL_PREFIX=/opt/isobusterpro in Terminal. It will create a Debug folder with a.deb package. Now, copy the.deb package to your Linux system: cp isobusterpro-4.5.1-unix-64bit.deb /usr/local/bin There should be more icons in the Dash in Windows for IsobusterPro. NOTE: The dev-build versions have not been tested on Linux. If you want to use a different destination, change the cp command to: cp isobusterpro-4.5.1-unix-64bit.deb /usr/local/bin/ You will also need to change the path in the IsobusterPro.desktop file in /usr/share/applications. If you want to use IsobusterPro to check for a file, you can put it in a folder and launch it through the command line. The command used is: isobusterpro.exe -i YOUR_DEVICE_NAME -e YOUR_FILE_NAME If you are comfortable with the command line, you can put this in a script and make it executable. It needs to have the path to IsobusterPro as the first argument in the script. So in you GUI front-end is going to launch the above. 1cb139a0ed
