test the fits. Also, we have checked the goodness of fit of the reference spectra using the chi-squared test. The resulting chi-squared values are of the order of 10^{-10} for a wide range of R_{in} values, indicating a good agreement between the reference spectra and the data. As a further check of the goodness of fit, we have carried out Monte Carlo simulations for the data and the reference spectra by simulating spectra, and fitting them by the maximum likelihood algorithm. To check the consistency of the results, the α -particle reference spectra have been calculated using the same (standard) set of the values of the LANS and CN parameters as in Ref. Unhide the Windows operating system. No wonder, these days, hidden windows stand out and usually make people think that something is wrong with the system. It may be a good idea to remove the "hidden" windows. You will see the real windows instead, which will make you notice that you don't need to hide them. For this purpose, a hidden window list has been developed. It is aimed at users that spend a lot of time browsing windows and find them useful. Many people make use of the "Hide" command of the Windows "Desktop" utility. It hides all the open windows and disables the display of open application menus. However, the command "Unhide" will not hide any of them. The "Hidden Window List" software will "Unhide" all the Windows of your system. This software has been developed because "Hiding windows" is an action that often causes the windows of the same application to be hidden from each other. This will make you take a look at every window and thus will not allow you to continue with your tasks. As a result, you will not be able to achieve what you had in mind. Also, as stated before, hiding windows is not advisable when some software is running. All the software that are affected by this type of problem must be run from the "Unhide" context. With the help of the "Hidden Window List" software, you will be able to see the windows of each application without taking a look at all of them, and this will help you when the need arises. Moreover, you will see the "Unhide" context button for each application and you will be able to activate it, even if you have not enabled the "Hide" command on the "Desktop" utility. So, once you have "Unhided" all the hidden windows, you will be able to notice all the windows of all the applications. There are, however, some situations in which you need to keep one or more windows hidden. In these cases, the software will allow you to continue using the "Desktop" utility. Indeed, hiding some windows means hiding them and the utility will help you to see the real windows and not the hidden ones. As a result, you will be able to carry on your work with all the windows that will be displayed on the screen. What if some of the windows you are hiding are the only ones available? The "Hidden Window List" software will allow you to enable
