11. To protect your data from password stealing, first choose a word that is easy to remember.

However, in addition to being easy to remember, the word needs to be able to be recognized by the computer while being encrypted. 12. Then, a series of numbers will be added and deleted based on the letters, such that a password of length 11 can be created. 13. Once you have created a reasonable word to use as a password, note down the password and do not write it down anywhere. In the event that someone finds out the password, they will not be able to access your password, because they do not have an idea of your word in the first place. |4. Now, you need to create a VBA script, and copy the word to the system clipboard. Then, if the work computer is run and opened, the copied word will appear on the form. If it is opened another way, it will not appear. Notes: | 1. You should always use a word that is easy to remember. This is one of the best ways to keep the password safe, as any password that is stored should be short. | 2. The longer the password is, the better it is. More complex passwords are more secure. | 3. When storing a password, write it down and stick it someplace safe. This is a good idea because it is not only easy to steal your password, but also easy to remember it. | 5. You should not save the password in text files, such as word documents or in plain text formats. Using such passwords is like using a burning match to extinguish a fire. You will only make it worse. | 6. Make sure you do not reuse the same password for all of your work accounts. This would be a recipe for disaster. | 7. If you want to try a password on more than one computer, you will need to take your word with you. | 8. You will need a tool such as WordPad or WordPerfect to type it in. | 9. If you want to keep it secret, you should not mention that you have a password written down. If you write it down, someone could look at it and learn your password. | 10. To program such a security feature, all you need is a VBA Script.

It is as easy as connecting to the Internet or sending an e-mail. | 11. Once you have your password,
