aim of this study was to explore the feasibility and properties of lymph node dissection in gastric cancer. In the current study, the clinicopathologic features, including the location of the primary tumor, the relationship between clinical stage and its sub-stages, the relationship between lymph node metastasis and its location and between lymph node metastasis and the age of patients, were analyzed in the patients with gastric cancer who were operated in our hospital from January 1998 to December 2002. Among 237 patients with gastric cancer, the rate of positivity of metastasis in 10 regional lymph nodes of the patients was 37.5%. The rate of positivity was statistically different between the patients
