During prolonged incubation with casein kinase I (CKI), we observed increased phosphorylation of a 23-kDa casein kinase IIalpha (CKIIalpha) band, the pattern of which was maintained during incubation. Ca(2+)-independent dephosphorylation of this band did not occur with either of two specific CKIIalpha antibodies. CKIIalpha phosphorylated with recombinant casein kinase I (rCKI) also exhibited a constant pattern of phosphorylation, suggesting that the CKI-induced phosphorylation may be responsible for the increased phosphorylation of CKIIalpha. Recombinant casein kinase IIbeta (rCKIIbeta) was not phosphorylated by CKI, while CKIIalpha(6His) (a recombinant CKIIalpha in which the C terminus was removed by a hexahistidine tag) was phosphorylated under similar conditions. These results suggest that the CKI-mediated phosphorylation of rCKIIalpha may contribute to an autocrine loop to maintain the phosphorylation of rCKIIalpha and that the C-terminal region of CKIIalpha may be involved in maintaining an inactive state.Q: Firebase Host 570a42141b
