Global Tuberculosis: The World Health Organization's Blog Blog Archive Thursday, August 15, 2011 Because tuberculosis (TB) remains a leading public health threat in the world, the 2011 target of the Stop TB Partnership has been set at 85% case detection and 85% cure by 2015. This target will allow more people than ever to be treated effectively and to share in the control of this deadly disease. to help us make the best possible decision. Sometimes people just need to communicate with someone who understands. To get started, I recommend people read what all the other commenters have written. As a person with several MSDs, I know it helps me a lot to read about what others have experienced. I finally found a neurologist who agrees that multiple sclerosis is a better diagnosis than MS. I had been sitting at home for almost 10 years trying to live in pain, and then my sister was diagnosed with MS. I knew something was wrong, but I couldn't put it together. I kept getting numbness and sharp shooting pains in my legs and arms. I was becoming very depressed and I had to sleep in a sitting position for about 5 hours a day. I almost lost my job because I couldn't walk or stand for very long. The sickness and fatigue was terrible. My friend recommended I see a neurologist for any possible MS. One of them suggested MS and she immediately told me it was a horrible disease. I was shocked and devastated. I drove almost 300 miles to the doctor's office and as I sat down on the couch, he said, "You have Osteoporosis". I had no idea what Osteoporosis was, but he made his diagnosis and that is why I have been feeling so bad for so long. I was told to go away because they were not helping me. After reading all the people's comments it explains so much. I am now referred to a pain management specialist and I am going to see a neurologist in a month. I will now know which disease to think of when I am in pain. It's nice to finally be able to answer the

Viva. Nerd culture is a strange beast. At times, it acts as a peer group of identity, but at other times, it becomes the opposite. It often seems like we brag about how much we hate sports and hate most of the celebrities because they're "famous" and not because we ever got to know them and clicked with them. But we also brag about how much we hate sport and sport stars because...they're "popular" and not because we got to know them and clicked with them. We live in a world where we can finally watch our favorite
