program. Gary Johnson, the Libertarian Party nominee for president, drew significant support from young voters in the latest NBC News|SurveyMonkey Weekly Election Tracking poll conducted from October 27 to November 2, 2016. According to the poll, 19% of young voters said they would vote for Johnson for president, compared to 6% of voters ages 18-34 who chose Gary Johnson for president in 2012. Johnson's support among voters ages 18-34 is 20 points higher than former Republican nominee Mitt Romney's support among the same age group in 2012. Following his gains

among young voters, Johnson is now tied with Hillary Clinton and Donald Trump in the presidential race among voters 18-34 years old. Johnson garnered 12% of support among voters ages 18-34 in the previous week's poll, making him the second-most popular candidate among voters ages 18-34. He was also the second-most popular candidate among voters ages 18-34 in an October 15-21 polling average from RealClearPolitics. Though Johnson continues to reach voters ages 18-34, he has not made significant inroads with millennials compared to previous elections. Johnson only reached 19% support among voters ages 18-34 in the 2012 election, compared to Romney's 28% support among the same age group. Romney experienced significant drops from his previous support among young voters in the two years following the 2012 election. In the previous seven weeks of polling, Johnson's support among voters ages 18-34 has been relatively stable, often fluctuating within the 9% to 13% range. His support has increased among young voters since the start of the Republican National Convention in early July, when he captured the support of 15% of voters ages 18-34

according to an NBC News|SurveyMonkey Weekly Election Tracking poll. The poll also found that Gary Johnson has performed significantly better among voters ages 18-34 than Donald Trump. In the previous seven weeks of polling, Trump's support among voters ages 18-34 was relatively stable, ranging
