Techsmith Camtasia 2019 Full Crack . . References Don't bother - once you own a full-fledged Mac, you'll hardly ever buy any more apps. That's one of the takeaways from a recent survey of Apple users by Software Advice. When asked whether they would consider buying a new app for their Mac, Apple fanatics and users of the company's mobile devices answered "No." The same was true for users of the iPad and iPhones: "I don't need the iPad apps I already have." In other words, for most folks, the constant barrage of new apps doesn't justify the cost. The big winners were the iPhone and iPad owners. They were most likely to anticipate picking up new apps. The Software Advice poll sampled more than 3,000 respondents, including 1,001 Apple users. While the iPhone/iPad combo came out ahead, other Apple gear such as the iPad, Mac, iPod, and MacBook also drew a fair number of the respondents. Most were convinced that the companies that made the portable devices such as Apple and Nokia actually had the best apps available. Still, the iPhone/iPad combo accounted for more than 64 percent of the tablet and smartphone users who said they were looking to buy an app this year. Other, smaller tablets that aren't out yet, like Asus' Eee Pad Transformer, seemed likely to follow the same pattern, since the technology for the apps is already there. Whether or not the phenomenon will trickle down to Android users and folks using other mobile platforms remains to be seen. The Software Advice poll leaves open the question of which smartphones will dominate in 2012, the Samsung Galaxy S2 1cb139a0ed
