Q: How to free up windows partition space I have a windows partition used on my computer, which I would like to use. I don't have any windows. My question is if it's possible to delete the whole windows partition and make room on my hard-drive, or should I buy a new one? A: I don't have any windows. There are ways to get Windows to work in a virtual machine. But you'll then lose the ability to boot and run Windows from the hard drive, and also you'll need to buy a Windows license. That being said, you can delete the Windows partition and make room for Ubuntu, but you'll need to allocate space for Windows somewhere else. You can use parted to delete the Windows partition from Ubuntu or else use the command line tool, fdisk. Here's a guide on how to delete the Windows partition from Ubuntu. A: You can always resize your windows installation on another partition and install the remaining space. Basically, you have two options: Resize the Windows partition while it is still installed. Install Ubuntu as dual boot and resize the Ubuntu partition for the remaining space when installation is complete. If you're going for the second option, make sure you backup your data!
