The US Senate has approved a measure that prohibits US companies from procuring Huawei Technologies devices and intellectual property. The new law is aimed at blocking the Chinese tech giant's efforts to expand its global footprint. Read more “Right now, there’s no company in the world that’s bigger than China, that has more influence over the free world, or that could have such a severe impact on our security if it were to get ahold of our technology,” Republican Senator Marco Rubio said in a Senate speech justifying the legislation. The bill passed by 76-23, with support from both Democrats and Republicans in the chamber. The passage of the measure will prevent US companies, including Google and Amazon, from purchasing Huawei devices or selling them online. “I also want to thank the administration of President Donald Trump for their leadership on this threat,” Rubio said, adding that the legislation is “a victory for America.” Huawei’s founder, Ren Zhengfei, has not said how he will respond to the bill. A spokeswoman for the company has, however, said that the US action is “for no reason” and that “it violates the US constitution.” The Senate Bill is "purely political" and arbitrary, she said. Huawei is one of China’s top companies. It is currently the second largest telecommunications equipment manufacturer in the world, and its products are used by some 45 percent of the world’s population. Over the past 20 years, it has expanded its global presence with factories in eight countries. Like this story?
