A typical soap dispenser is typically mounted to a wall of a sink or other receptacle in which a body of soap is stored.

The dispenser is then covered with a cover that is designed to be taken off when it is desired to dispense the soap. Such dispensers have limitations and disadvantages as is discussed below. First, soap dispensers are manufactured in various sizes, with various sizes of chambers for holding soap. It is desirable for a manufacturer of soap dispensers to minimize the size of the soap chamber, because the smaller the size of the chamber, the less expensive the dispenser will be. It is also desirable for the chamber to have a sufficiently large volume of soap that is dispensed, thus reducing the quantity of soap required to dispense a certain amount of soap (e.g., an amount sufficient to bathe a finger). However, when a soap chamber is made as small as possible, the soap chamber has a small volume. Such soap dispensers therefore dispense a small amount of soap and are less efficient in dispensing soap than dispensers having larger soap chambers. It is desirable to make such soap dispensers efficient, because this ensures that less soap is wasted during use. It is also desirable to make such dispensers "user friendly" as well, in the sense that it is easy for users to grasp the soap chamber and grasp and pull the cover off the soap chamber to dispense soap. However, if a dispenser having a small chamber is too easy to open, the chamber could be opened accidentally 09e8f5149f
