2018throw What mechanisms, tactics, approaches do your organisations use to keep developers on board? ===== karmakaze Employee - \- Make sure you have a culture of caring about them and their work. \- Make sure their jobs matter to them. \-
Make sure they have the autonomy and ability to give their best to their work. \- Provide clear goals and management. \- Communicate well. \- Value feedback. \- Care about your developers. If they want to talk about their issues, you should be listening. \- Don't be afraid to employ developers with less experience. When you're pooling teams, either the lesser experienced people have the support of the "pro" or it's their opportunity to learn. I had the privilege to work with some amazing open source developers on writing a 60+ page ticket tracking system. The writer kept reassuring me that I should not feel bad if we had multiple bugs in the new code because that indicated we needed _more_ features! I took it for the highest respect and care. ----- toddh We have all sorts of incentives... \- Programmers are paid very well for doing what they do. \- We focus on skill and mastery of the parts of the problem space. Because we, as a company, want to be very good at our product. \- The work is interesting, challenging, personally fulfilling. \- The work requires discipline. It's OK if you end up doing something that sucks.
But you can always get your energy back by learning what went wrong, and resolving to do better next time. We solve problems together and over time my skill set has grown, and my comfort zone has expanded. ----- PaulHoule "Managers don't make decisions, they just follow orders". I think this is the most important thing. No matter how much effort you put in, you will be treated like a cog even if you are on the top of the list. "You're not doing anything new, you should just run your code through
