ThiefAware is a surveillance application that allows you to monitor a specific area and detect the motion of any objects.

ThiefAware enables you to start recording automatically when it detects movement. The application supports hard drive space management. You can review the footage at any time with the easy to use review mode. You can choose the amount of hard drive space that ThiefAware uses, so you never have to worry about running out of hard drive space. The recording is started on a schedule and is stopped automatically when ThiefAware detects no motion for a defined amount of time. You can set the length of the delay between each check for motion. ThiefAware is very easy to use and comes with a User Manual.

3. RaptorKeeper

RaptorKeeper Description: Do you love to watch birds? You are most likely to say that you do, if you have a window in your house or if you live in a big city, but do you actually know what birds are? Well, now you can, without having to become a biologist. RaptorKeeper is an application that can help you to keep track of your favorite birds and other animals that can fly. It provides you with a lot of information about what you have seen. What is the meaning of the name ‘raptor keeper’? Did you know that the word ‘raptor’ comes from the Latin word ‘rapio’, which means “to grab”? This is what makes a raptor a bird of prey. The Latin word ‘maximus’ (which means “greatest” or “the most important”) is used to describe the beak of the raptors. So the official name for the ‘raptor keeper’ is ‘raptor of the greatest beak’. There are about 325 different species of birds. And although some species might not be able to fly, every bird species that has been identified is included in RaptorKeeper. No matter if you live in a city, country or the middle of the ocean, you can find birds anywhere. It is the fastest-growing group of animals on Earth.

RaptorKeeper Requirements: No requirements Limitations: The application is free and open source. This means that you will find some

This extension creates an easy way for keyboard shortcut macros to save and restore the playback position of a recording. This can be helpful when creating interviews, home movies, or any other type of video, where it's important to keep a specific point in the video. There are several ways to set up this: The first is to record a new recording, then use the keyboard to select a point, and then press the key to set playback position to the selected point. The second is to make the video file public. Then, when you want to set playback position, you use the keyboard to select a point, and then press the key to set playback position to the selected point. KEYMACRO is a non-exclusive extension, which means that it will function with any application that uses keyboard shortcuts. If the application you are using doesn't have keyboard shortcuts, or doesn't have an option to choose a specific point in the video, then you can still use the extension. Just select a point in the video by holding down the shift key, then use the key you selected to select the point in the video.

Another feature of KEYMACRO is the ability to set playback position when the extension is minimized to the system tray. This is useful when you're using the extension with video software that doesn't have a way to set playback position. For more information on the methods

ThiefAware is a program that creates digital video recordings of the real world. It uses a video capture device, such as a webcam, to monitor the scene for motion. When it detects something moving it starts recording. By default, ThiefAware records for a minute before checking for more motion, if there is still something moving it continues recording for another minute at which point it again checks for more motion. You can review the footage at any time with the easy to use review mode, which also allows you to save individual frames as picture files, and optionally date and time stamp them. You never have to worry about running out of hard drive space. You can limit ThiefAware's hard drive space usage to any value you like. Old footage is automatically deleted when hard drive space runs out. 21 - If your desire is to implement a full fledged audio recorder for your applications, then Audacity (is the program to use. But, if you have a cheap "sound card" (integrated or not) and want to record and playback audio, your best bet is Audacity anyway. 22 - If you are using Windows, use the WMV file format. It's the most reliable format for transcoding video. 23 - The default format for most video programs is YUV. The YUV format, as used in most programs, is difficult to transcode to other formats. And, there is a high probability that the chosen transcode program will not produce the desired results. 31 - Any popular distro will provide you with a "soundcard" driver for your audio capturing device (it probably won't work on Windows though). 32 - To save time and money, don't buy a "sound card" and forget to download the drivers. 33 - Use the same software that you use for your video capture device for audio capture. 4 - If the application is written in Perl, you can download some Perl modules that will help you. 5 - If you are recording video, you will need a video capture device with a "webcam" feature. The good news is that you can buy a cheap capture device from a major online retailer (e.g., newegg.com) that will work. 6 - Your application's current state is that it is a stand alone program with no user interface. However, there are quite a few Perl modules and scripts out there that will allow you to record and save video files. 7 - It is important to implement your application such that it captures motion. 16 - If you need to transcode the video for your capture device, the best option is to use the free open source (LGPL) libavcodec library. It has support for many common file types including AVI, MPEG4, MPEG2, and others. 17 - If
