Longitudinal associations between work-family conflict, work-home conflict and employees' work-family behavior: a 13-year follow-up study. This study aimed to examine associations between work-family conflict and work-home conflict over a 13-year period, and to examine the longitudinal effects of these relationships on employees' work-family behavior. Data were obtained from the Swedish Work Environment Survey, conducted in 2001-2002, 2004 and 2007-2008, with a subsample of 2426 employees of 18-64 years of age. There was a cumulative increase in work-family conflict over the study period, but the stability of work-home conflict over this period was only moderate. Among women, but not among men, work-family conflict predicted a weaker work-home balance, and this relationship was moderated by age. Work-family conflict was associated with worse work-home behavior for younger women, but not for older women.
The findings suggest that the interplay between work-family conflict and the work-home domain is more dynamic than previously assumed, and that this dynamic varies according to the demands on employees' personal and work life.

Differential distribution of different class II MHC antigens in normal adult human lymphoid tissues. The class II major histocompatibility complex

(MHC) antigens are highly polymorphic antigens, which form a critical link in the immune response. There are at least two functionally different class II genes, HLA-DR and HLA-DQ, in addition to the polymorphic HLA-A, -B and -C antigens. In order to elucidate the distribution of the two class II antigens in different lymphoid tissue compartments, we have used polyclonal monoclonal antibodies (MoAb) specific for DR or DQ to examine normal lymphoid tissues. We have demonstrated that DR antigens are present in the B-cell compartments, but not in the T-cell compartments. DQ antigens are
