I have a regular view controller that needs to be notified when certain a network task completes. I've been thinking about doing it with NSTimer, but that seems like a busy loop. Is there a cleaner/better way? A: If you need to keep the main thread free for the next message, maybe you can use a block queue like, for example, GCD. The main thread, once it finished his work, will add a message in the block queue and your async operation's completion block will receive this message with the result. Also you can look at NSOperationQueue if you are not aware of its methods. The power of support: can little be done without one? In today's practice of medicine, nursing, and social work, support is often associated with palliative care, assisted living, and hospice, while living with a chronic illness is often accompanied by stigma and discrimination. A personal story is used to suggest that living with a chronic illness is difficult without support and understanding. It is also suggested that professionals are in positions of privilege, and their understanding and attitude toward chronic illness impacts the care of patients.Top 10 Best Selling Songs of the 90's [Infographic] The 90's was a decade that allowed artists to be creative and experiment with sounds, styles, and fashion. We took a look back at the top 10 best selling songs of the 90's and found the results may be surprising. We ranked these songs by Billboard's Hot 100 airplay from September 1990 to December 1999. While this decade saw hits from Destiny's Child, Usher, and No Doubt, many others never made their way into the national charts. It would be interesting to see the 20 year anniversary results with these hits today.JHEP [01]{} (2003) 053 \[arXiv:hep-th/0210176\]. M. Gremm, Phys. Lett.
